Description: The Dartmouth-Hitchcock Female Pelvic Medicine and Reconstructive Surgery (FPMRS) program was approved by the ACGME in September 2018. Our goal is to train academic subspecialty physicians to be outstanding leaders in clinical care, research and teaching. The graduating FPMRS fellow at Dartmouth-Hitchcock will become an expert in the comprehensive surgical and medical management of women with pelvic floor disorders, including: urinary incontinence and lower urinary tract disorders; pelvic organ prolapse and childbirth-related injuries, including fistulas; anal incontinence and bowel dysfunction. A diverse training in minimally-invasive vaginal, laparoscopic and robotic surgery is available, as well as global health opportunities. Clinical training will include formal rotations in Urology, Gastroenterology and Colorectal Surgery; in addition to exposure in Geriatric medicine. There is 12 months of dedicated research time during the three-year fellowship, with options for collaboration in The Dartmouth Institute, The Thayer School of Engineering at Dartmouth, among others.
