Program Description: Our three-year female pelvic medicine and reconstructive surgery (FPMRS) program aims to train fellows to become leaders and experts in women's health and FPMRS while pursuing a rigorous academic career. The clinical and research training experience is enriched by utilizing the multidisciplinary expertise of urology, colorectal surgery, gastroenterology, gerontology, physical therapy, neurology, as well as plastic surgery. These collaborations are well established through our Center for Pelvic Floor Disorders and Transgender Health Program. Our program also emphasizes the development of clinician scientists who will develop and implement relevant and important basic science, translational, and clinical research in the field of FPMRS. Fellows spend one year in a basic science research laboratory at the Vincent Center for Reproductive Biology.

Other Degrees or Curricula Offered: Additional training, including a completion of the Summer Program in Clinical Effectiveness, which is available on a case-by-case basis. We anticipate that the rigorous academic and research curriculum provided within the fellowship will enable the fellow to pursue an academic career in basic, translational, or clinical research.
